Words Worth Reading:

People with character may be loud or quiet, but they do tend to have a certain level of self-respect. Self-respect is not the same as self-confidence or self-esteem. Self-respect is not based on IQ or any of the mental or physical gifts that help get you into a competitive college. It is not comparative. It is not earned by being better than other people at something. It is earned by being better than you used to be, by being dependable in times of testing, straight in times of temptation. It emerges in one who is morally dependable. Self-respect is produced by inner triumphs, not external ones. It can only be earned by a person who has endured some internal temptation, who has confronted their own weaknesses and who knows, "Well, if worse comes to worst, I can endure that. I can overcome that."

-from The Road to Character
by David Brooks

Commodities Update:

- Clark Dietrich has announced a 10% price increase on all steel studs and accessories effective 8/3/15.
- IKO has announced a 3-5% increase in shingles for 8/17/15 and GAF will be increasing shingle prices an average of $3/square on 8/3/15. Both increases will most likely affect retail prices by September.
- Panel products: OSB has had a noticeable increase in the last few weeks, but the increases seem to have stalled most recently. SYP plywood has had a few weeks of falling prices, but there is a feeling that the bottom may have been reached.
- Dimension lumber: The spruce market had a few weeks of increases recently, but seems to have leveled off for the time being.

Hardware Humor:

Brain Builder: Can you hammer out the answer?

On a strange construction site, you meet a plumber and an electrician. The electrician, you are told, lies every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, but tells the truth all the other days. The plumber lies on Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, and speaks the truth the other days of the week.

Electrician: "Yesterday, I was lying."

Plumber: "So was I."

Which day of the week did they say that?

For the answer to this month's BRAIN BUILDER!
