Commodities Update:

*Dimension lumber: SPF lumber seems to be falling softly in most all Eastern/Western/Euro stock and is a good value right now. SYP (PT lumber) has been falling back also, as expected.

*Panels: SYP plywood continues a slow, steady upward trend while OSB languishes at very low levels. Looks like one of our distributors is expecting LP SmartSide siding products to increase 5-8% on 1/5/26.

*Another vendor is reporting aluminum trims and flashings will increase 8-12% this month (December). Seems like the steel stud increase either did not happen or is much less of an increase than was expected, although it looks like they haven't given up on the idea of an increase. We got a new announcement right before printing informing us of a 1/5/26 increase.

Bagged Portland and masonry cements will increase 1/2/26 by $.50/bg and $.40/bg respectively.

Quote to think about:

"Each day...

Do something good.

Say something kind.

Be fair; be just.

Be the positive change the world needs."

Don't forget us for your holiday shopping!!

Words worth reading:

From Living a Life that Matters
by Harold S Kushner

But in the final analysis, the key to immortality, the reassurance that my life has mattered and was not lived in vain, is not that different from the key to yours or anyone else's. I find it in the work I have done, the acts of kindness I have performed, the love I have given and the love I have received, the people who will smile when they remember me, and the children and grandchildren through whom my name and memory will be perpetuated. I have cherished, and I would commend to you, the words of Ralph Waldo Emerson:

"To leave the world a bit better, whether by a healthy child, a garden patch, or a redeemed social condition; to know that even one life has breathed easier because you lived- that is to have succeeded."

Dad joke of the month:

I thought the dryer
was shrinking my clothes.

Turns out it was the refrigerator all along.
